

Noatak (9.12)

Introduction

Noatak (version 9.12) is the last major release of the MindTouch 2009 family. This release is the first step in a phased approach to adding eventual support for other databases - while doing this refactoring, we were able to also improve the performance of MindTouch with the addition of a caching module that improved performance by 10x in our testing.

This release also added support for advanced charting through MindTouch Charts, powered by AnyChart. This commercial add-on allows you to create a wide variety of charting and gauges in MindTouch.

And is the case with all our releases, we have continued to polish the user experience to continue our strong tradition of providing a product that is incredibly easy to use.

Features

Performance

The long-term goal of the MindTouch platform team is to offer alternative database storage engines. In order to undertake this project, we had to first refactor significant parts of the API to support NHibernate. While undergoing these changes, the MindTouch caching module was developed. This caching module speeds up performance of pages up to 10x (one specific test for an early customer showed an average of 4x improvement) by reducing redundant hits to the database. The caching module also allows you to take advantage of well-tested distributed caching systems like Memcached for storage. The caching module is available for commercial customers of MindTouch.

Scaling

As we built out previous versions of MindTouch, we accumulated some technical debt around our scaling story - quite frankly, scaling out across multiple application servers was not as easy as it should be. We've addressed some of the core issues that our customers have run into, including some issues with Lucene: failed startup under heavy load [\[#7222\]](#), silent failure on index rebuilds [\[#7238\]](#), and errors when using a NFS mount [\[#7223\]](#). Most importantly, we've added a persistent queue to Lucene - with this, index builds which were interrupted will not require a full rebuilding. [\[#7434\]](#)

Charting

Building dynamic dashboards with a powerful charting package is an important aspect for any collaboration platform - how else can you measure success? While MindTouch has offered charting packages in the past, there were drawbacks: Visifire only worked with Silverlight, and Google Charts wasn't a tenable solution for behind-the-firewall deployments.

With the new MindTouch Charts (powered by AnyCharts), you can now mashup your data into over 36 cross-platform Flash-driven charts. Put together a simple attractive pie chart, or embed an indicator gauge to track your project's progress on MindTouch.

Chart generation can be done as simply as taking advantage of our simple wrapper around common charts, or you can generate a completely custom XML document to build your custom chart.

MindTouch Charts must be purchased as a separate add-on for commercial customers of MindTouch. Some samples are available here.

Editor

We've added preliminary support for CKEditor 3.0, the next evolution of the WYSIWYG editor. CKEditor 3.0 is faster and more accessible than previous versions of the editor.

At this point, the CKEditor 3.0's integration with MindTouch is in a stable state, but may have bugs in edge cases. In order to ensure complete backwards compatibility and to vet the quality of the new editor, we will not be enabling this editor as the default until the Olympic release.

We highly recommend you test CKEditor 3.0 in a test environment to get a feel for its functionality. Learn how to enable CKEditor 3.0 in MindTouch or read the CKEditor 3.0 release notes to find out more.

Various UI Improvements

One of the most common complaints regarding the editor experience is the loss of data on page save if the server goes down or your net access fails. In order to improve this experience, the saving experience will now do a pre-save check to ensure that you're logged in, the system is up to receive your save and you have permissions to save that page. If any of these conditions are not met, then the editor will stop you from executing the save, thus giving you time to save your changes locally before attempting another save. While auto-save is the best long-term solution for this, this small change will provide a much better user experience around saving.

Filename-specific groupings begone!

As a part of the continuing evolution of the product, we cleaned up the experience around files. Being big internal fans of storing documents inside MindTouch (due to the ability to index its contents through our search engine), we were continually frustrated with the proliferation of the "same" files when uploading new versions due to mis-aligned filenames. We've added a very simple feature: "Attach new version" which will attach a new version of the file, regardless of its filename.

We've also cleaned up the image gallery - the older version was far too complex in its functionality without achieving the benefits that

DekiScript-driven image gallery replacements have offered. We have vastly simplified the image gallery interface (and code!) to offer the bare functionality, but we want to start driving people in utilizing the file table as the method for file management, instead of splitting images and files into separate concepts.

In this release, we have also bundled an alternative to the default captcha program inside MindTouch for new user sign-ups; MindTouch now ships with the Recaptcha plug-in, which is a popular web-based alternative utilized by sites like Facebook. This is not enabled by default, as it requires registration and configuration.
